The Legacy of Chico Mendes and the Global Grassroots Environmental Movement

April 4-6, 2014 American University School of International Service Washington, D.C.

The Chico Vive conference is bringing together grassroots activists, NGOs, students, engaged scholars, applied scientists, policymakers, journalists and others to discuss the development of the global grassroots environmental movement in the 25 years since environmental martyr Chico Mendes' death. Participants will plan strategies for coordinated international actions, networks, coalitions and initiatives to advance sustainability, defend the environment from depredation and climate change, and protect the rights of its traditional inhabitants.

Keynote Speakers

Marina Silva

During almost 30 years in public life, Marina Silva has become internationally known for her defense of ethics, natural resources and sustainable development. After election to local, state and national offices, she served as Brazil's environment minister from 2003 to 2008. As a result the British newspaper The Guardian named her as one of 50 people who could help save the planet.

A native of the Amazon state of Acre and daughter of a rubber tapper, Marina Silva learned to read and write as a teenager and graduated from the Federal University of Acre at age 26. A union leader and close associate of Chico Mendes, she first ran for public office at age 28 and was the youngest person ever elected to the Brazilian Senate, at age 36.

After her tenure at the environment ministry she returned to the Senate. In 2010 she ran for the Brazilian presidency as the Green Party candidate and received 19 percent of the vote in the first round. In late 2013 she presented herself as the vice-presidential candidate of the Brazilian Socialist Party in the upcoming presidential election of 2014.

Marina Silva has received numerous awards, including the UN's "Champion of the Earth" award, the Duke of Edinburgh's medal, and the Goldman Environmental Prize, among many others.

John H. Knox

John Knox is an internationally recognized expert on human rights law and international environmental law. In July 2012 the United Nations Human Rights Council appointed him to a threeyear mandate as its first Independent Expert on human rights obligations relating to the enjoyment of a safe, clean, healthy and sustainable environment. He is preparing a series of reports to the Human Rights Council on the relationship between human rights and environmental protection.

John Knox is the Henry C. Lauerman Professor of International Law at Wake Forest University. In 2003 he was awarded the Francis Deák Prize, established by the American Society of International Law, to honor a younger author who has made a "meritorious contribution to international legal scholarship." From 2001 to 2005 he chaired a national advisory committee to the Environmental Protection Agency on the North American Commission for Environmental Cooperation. More recently he has provided pro bono assistance to environmental groups and to the Maldives, a small island state in the Indian Ocean.

INTERNATION

global witness

No matter the nation in which we reside, we as human beings now face a choice: either to be swept along by the powerful currents of technological change and economic determinism into a future that may threaten our deepest values, or to build a capacity for collective decision making on a global scale that allows us to shape that future in ways that protect human dignity and reflect the aspirations of nations and peoples.

—Al Gore, The Future: Six Drivers of Global Change (2013)
